Fallujah battle highlights Marine joint capabilities

By Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Services

WASHINGTON — Nothing highlights the importance of flexibility and joint capabilities better than the recent battle of Fallujah, the commandant of the Marine Corps told the Senate Armed Services Committee Feb. 10.

Gen. Michael Hagee said the battle in November and December 2004 highlighted the flexibility, adaptability and joint capabilities of the U.S. military.

“The Marine force, tightly integrated with Army brigades, Seabees, joint air assets, and coalition forces including five Iraqi battalions, mounted a high-intensity joint assault in a demanding urban environment, destroying the insurgent safe haven in Fallujah,” Hagee said. “This close-quarters fight against an adaptable and dangerous enemy was executed rapidly and successfully.”

What’s more, the general said, once the fight was over, the Marines and soldiers “immediately returned to counterinsurgency and civil affairs operations.”

While the battle highlighted success, there are challenges ahead, Hagee told the senators. “The tempo of operations and demands on the force are extremely high across the entire Marine Corps, both regular and reserve, in supporting the global war on terror,” he said.

Since Operation Enduring

Freedom, the Corps has gone from a peacetime deployment rotation of six months deployed and 18 months home to a 1-to-1 rotation: seven months deployed, seven months at home station.

“This means that Marine units in the operating forces are either deployed or are training to relieve deployed units,” he said. “No forces have been fenced, and since 9/11 we have activated in excess of 95 percent of our selected Marine Corps Reserve units, the majority who have served in either Iraq and Afghanistan.”

In 2004, the Corps met recruiting and retention goals both in quantity and quality. “Although we remain on track to meet our annual goal this year, the additional effort required by our recruiters and our career retention specialists is quite significant,” he said.

Congress authorized an increase of 3,000 Marines for the Corps in the fiscal 2005 budget. Hagee said in addition to that increase, the Corps is looking for ways to better organize the force and reduce operations tempo.

“We are working with the other services and the combatant commanders to project future force requirements,” he said. “Based on these projections, our internal structural changes and the secretary’s 3 percent authorization, I do not believe we need an end-strength increase beyond

178,000 at this time.

“If the current force-level projections hold, we hope to be able to reduce our op tempo to 2-to-1 by the first part of next year.” All of this is at the mercy of events on the ground, and the Marine Corps and the combatant commanders will continue to monitor requirements around the world.

Hagee told the committee that 30 percent of the Marine Corps’ ground equipment and 25 percent of its aviation equipment is deployed to U.S. Central Command - “one of the harshest operating environments on the planet.”

He said the fiscal 2005 supplemental budget request will address the significant increases in wear and tear and combat losses.

PPE saves more than lives at MCB

By Lance Cpl. Nich R. Babb
Combat Correspondent

In the supply warehouses of Maintenance Center Barstow, there is a worker trying to inventory his stock. He reaches up to the third shelf to grab a box, but when he pulls it off, he loses his grip, and the 25-pound box falls seven feet onto the worker’s foot. It would have been a harmless incident, but the worker decided not to wear his steel toed safety boots today, allowing the box to crush his foot.

The most important way to prevent serious physical accidents like this is to make sure all of the employees are issued the correct personal protective equipment (PPE) to complete their job, said Michelle Bledsoe, a safety specialist for MCLB.

“Training is most important, whether formal or informal,” Bledsoe said.

The hazards that a worker might experience while completing their job designates the specific PPE a supervisor should give to their subordinates, said Bledsoe.

Gloves, safety glasses, earplugs, boots, hard hats, protective suits and respirators are all different types of PPE. Each of these pieces of equipment serves a specific purpose to protect a part of the body, she said.

PPE is issued to individuals for their own protection while working in the Maintenance Center, said Randy Spencer, environmental and safety manager of MCB.

“In the words of Col. Arthur Sass (Maintenance Center commander), ‘Safety first, safety always,’” Spencer said.

According to Spencer, his biggest challenge, is trying to make the wearing of PPE normal and second nature for MCB employees, he said.

In an attempt to make PPE more appealing, an assortment of goggles, earplugs and gloves are stocked in order to give workers a choice.

To be able to provide the proper amount of safety, all PPE must fit, be serviceable and be used correctly, said Bledsoe.

Courtesy www.umaine.edu

A respirator, which is a device to filter toxic particles out of breathing air, is an example of equipment that must be fitted and worn correctly to have the most effectiveness, said Stephen Locke, MCLB’s respiratory protection program manager.

If a worker needs a respirator, the occupational health nurse must first ensure that they do not have any respiratory problems, said

Locke. Then the employee is fit tested for his own personal respirator as well as trained on how to properly use it.

Training an employee on how to use PPE is important in protecting the workers, Bledsoe said. Proper fit of a piece of PPE is also essential for mission accomplishment, said Locke. Ultimately, it is the job of the individual employee to make sure that they are preventing a serious accident from happening, Spencer said.

Two issues are in this installment of the MCLB Barstow's ICE update. The first is a comment received via the ICE system as a suggestion to improve customer interaction with the staff of the MCLB Commissary. The second is a note from the Branch Medical Clinic about a comment received through the ICE System.

Customer Comments:

This comment was received by the ICE system as a suggestion to improve customer interaction with the staff of the MCLB Commissary:

I recommend that the baggers at the commissary have nametags like the other commissary workers.

I noticed last week that they wear pins that say, for example, "Bagger061" instead of their name. I'd like to see their names so I know how to address them with courtesy.

Service Response:

Smashing idea, I don't know why I didn't think of it myself. Give me a couple of days and I'll make it happen.

Thanks and keep those comments coming

ICE Administrator's Note:

I went to the Commissary a few days later and thanked my bagger by name.

Note: The Branch Medical Clinic Officer in Charge very much desires to meet and/or discuss the ICE comment sent in on Jan. 28 with the person who submitted it. Specifically, the OIC wishes to provide an apology and an outline of steps enacted as a remedy. Please call LCDR Jefcoat at (760) 577-6575 to discuss this issue.

Learning from the 332nd Fighter Group

By Lt. jg Tavis Long
Command Chaplain

This year we will celebrate the 60th anniversary of the end of World War II. Many have called those who defended democracy around the world at that time "The Greatest Generation." But, even amongst the greats there are those who are the greatest of the greats. Such are the brave men of the 332nd Fighter Group.

The 332nd was the compilation of the 101st, the 301st, and the 302nd Fighter Squadrons. Their mission was to escort the Allied Bombers into location in order to route out the Nazi regime.

In order to identify themselves to each other in the squadron as well as their Allied counterparts, the 332nd painted the tails of their aircraft red thus giving them the name "The Fighting Red Tails."

Originally, the Red Tails were to be just an "experiment" and the creation of the fighter group was to be confidential. The confidentiality was to be maintained because the squadron was made up entirely with black pilots who were being "tested" to see if they could be used in combat.

But, while the United States of America was fighting Nazism, fascism, and racial discrimination in Europe they were "sweeping under the rug" the blemishes of discrimination on the home front.

The blacks in America were shunned from certain places in public, had to eat in different restaurants than whites, and could not hold certain jobs because they were only designated for the white folks. When World War II broke out, the blacks banded together to do their part in defending a nation that rarely defended them; and they did it without

Proper Honors to Colors

For years the method of rendering honors to colors while in civilian attire has not been in accordance with the U.S. Code, Title 36, the U.S. Navy Regulations or the Marine Corps Flag Manual.

The new Drill and Ceremonies Order P5060.1 is now in compliance.

over the heart."

complaint or reservation.

In spite of the protests of many in the military and others in the civilian sector, 992 pilots reported to an all-black flight training facility in Tuskegee, Alabama.

Another 10,000 blacks went to Chanute Field in Illinois to learn aircraft maintenance. While only 445 of the pilots made it into combat by the war's end, all of the famous Tuskegee Airmen, as they were known, were men of distinction, bravery, and loyalty.

No one knew much about the "experiment" using black pilots. Those of the 332nd were not allowed to associate with their white colleagues and if they were briefed at all on a mission, it was done without the white pilots in the room. In spite of the setbacks, the 332nd became the desired escort for bombers.

On bombing raids, the pilots would specifically ask for these mysterious Red Tails. One white pilot described their talent like this: "The P-38s always stayed too far out. Some of the Mustang group stayed in too close ... Other groups, we got the feeling that they just wanted to go and shoot down 109s ... The Red Tails were always out there where we wanted them to be ... We had no idea they were Black; it was the Army's best kept secret."

But, what started as a secret "experiment" became an example of courage and patriotism. The Fighting Red Tails flew over 15,000 sorties during the war destroying 111 German planes in the air and 150 on the ground. Over 150 railcars were destroyed and one pilot actually single handedly sank a German destroyer with his machine gun fire. Over 850 medals were earned including 150 Distinguished Flying Crosses, 8 Purple Hearts, 14 Bronze Stars, and the highest award a unit can receive, the Presidential Unit Citation. Thirty-two of these brave men were captured and held as prisoners of war and sixty-six of them gave that final measure of devotion. All of this was done to protect the constitution of a nation that guaranteed certain unalienable rights—rights that many living in the United States never enjoyed because of the color of their skin.

Often in life we often feel mistreated, neglected, or taken advantage of. No one could have felt that more than the pilots of the 332nd Fighter Group. But, much can be learned from them. Often what is important is not your actions, but your reactions to certain situation. The pilots of the 332nd epitomize the biblical principle of returning goodness for evil.

Throughout the scriptures there is a lot of instruction on this concept of returning good for evil. Romans 12:17, encourages man to not pay back evil for evil, but to be good to someone even when they purposely do you harm. In Matthew 5:11, says to bless those that persecute you. Now, this concept is not an easy one to accomplish, but it is important. Because you never know what kind of an impact you may have on someone by just returning kindness for his or her maliciousness.

After all do not you think you have been shown kindness before even when you mistreated someone. We horribly mistreat the Savior of the world everyday. We don't talk to Him like we should, we don't trust Him like He has asked us, but yet He promises to stick closer to us than our own brother (Proverbs 18:24).

Even when we mistreat him, he loves us in spite of our shortcomings. So, how do you react to someone when they mistreat you? We would all do well to learn a lesson from the brave men of the 332nd Fighter Group. Even when you are mistreated the braver thing is not to return the evil done to you, but to return the deed with kindness. And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." (Ephesians 4:32)
